What is this course about? This course has two objectives. The first is to examine and reflect on current planning issues, controversies and dilemmas affecting New York City’s communities. This entails an understanding of the historical and political context of planning in New York City as well as basic familiarity with the governmental and quasi-governmental institutions that currently shape the city’s development. The second objective is to “look beneath the hood” of the non-governmental organizations involved in planning processes and planning politics, aka civil society organizations. In this endeavor, we will rely on the book Inclusion and Democracy by Iris Marion Young and a number of other readings that discuss ideas of “the public,” the concept of multiple publics and counter-publics, and the relationship between civil society organizations and the government, often known in political science as “the state” (which is confusing). Students in the course will undertake their own investigations of civil society organizations trying to accomplish changes in planning and policy in NYC. The final section of the class will be dedicated to a close examination of the politics of the Gowanus Neighborhood Rezoning, which is currently underway.

Text: Inclusion and Democracy is available from the Hunter College Library as an e-book. You can also purchase a used copy at alibris.com for between $12 and $20. Other readings are accessible from the course Blackboard site.

Expectations & Grading: The course requirements are: short reading reflections due at midnight the Monday before class in weeks, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 (10% each); an in-class case presentation prepared collaboratively with two of your classmates in week 9, 10, 11, 12, 13 or 14 (25%); and a one-question (approx. 1,500 words) take home exam handed out at the final class meeting on December 18th and due by midnight on Monday, December 22nd (25%).

Students should come to class ready to engage in discussion about the readings and ask questions/offer insights about the material presented. I highly value preparation and participation. Exceptional engagement in and contribution to class discussion will bump you up a half a grade at the end of the semester; poor attendance to class or disengagement from the discussion will exert the opposite effect.
